Last questions

Songs of Dust and Water, by M.J. Hydara. These questions give away the ending, so use them when everyone has finished the book.

1. In the last chapter, Fatou still says the Union should have taken Veldane's money. Do you think she is wrong? (page 220)
2. A visitor from Madina's district asks who is still poor in Nafawol. Hassan answers at once: "The farmers at the edges." He admits the Council has argued about it for eight years without solving it. Does his answer change how you feel about what the Union has built? (page 222)
3. Halima asks her great-grandmother whether she trusted Adam, and Kadiatou thinks before she answers. How far did you trust him, from Madina to the end? (page 222)
4. In the last scene Kadiatou can't draw the bucket from the old well alone, and her great-granddaughter Halima pulls with her. Who else from the book would you put on that rope? (page 224)